HILLS

I cannot see them, yet I know they stand
Waiting for me beyond my circled view,
Wide and deep-bosomed, bending to the land,
Hemming their slopes with an uneven hand,
Withdrawn remotely from the river's slue.

Tender they are, when morning throbs the skies,
Tender with oblique shadows to the west:
Kindly they are when mist of evening sighs,
And the first wakeful constellations rise
Out of the enforced profundity of rest.

Sometimes they hold the modulated sheen
Of blossoms still unbroken on the stem—
A sharp suffusion of imperfect green—
An ecstasy of flame—or a serene
Crystal beneath a pallid stratagem.

I cannot hear them, yet how well I know
Their call to me through perishable space—
Their mood of peace swung lightly clear and low
Above the distance I have still to go
Across the hours I have yet to trace.

And when time has been traced and distance wills,
I shall have reached my refuge in the hills!

JERRY EVAN.
